Load Data

Load the following data: + applications from app_data_sample.parquet + edges from edges_sample.csv

Define the path to the data directory
data_path <- "E:/Users/pc/Downloads/672_project_data/"

Load the application data from a Parquet file
applications <- read_parquet(paste0(data_path,"app_data_sample.parquet"))

Load the edges data from a CSV file
edges <- read_csv(paste0(data_path,"edges_sample.csv"))

Reveiwing the parquet file

Get gender for examiners

We'll get gender based on the first name of the examiner, which is recorded in the field `examiner_name_first`. We'll use library `gender` for that, relying on a modified version of their own example.

###Note that there are over 2 million records in the applications table – that's because there are many records for each examiner, as many as the number of applications that examiner worked on during this time frame. Our first step therefore is to get all unique names in a separate list `examiner_names`. We will then guess gender for each one and will join this table back to the original dataset. So, let's get names without repetition:

get a list of first names without repetitions examiner_names <- applications %>% distinct(examiner_name_first)

examiner_names
```

# A tibble: 2,595 x 1
examiner_name_first
<chr>
1 JACQUELINE
```

2 BEKIR
3 CYNTHIA
4 MARY
5 MICHAEL
6 LINDA
7 KARA
8 VANESSA
9 TERESA
10 SUN
# i 2,585 more rows
```

Now let's use function `gender()` as shown in the example for the package to attach a gender and probability to each name and put the results into the table `examiner_names_gender`

Use the gender package to estimate gender based on first names
examiner_names_gender <- examiner_names %>% do(results = gender(.$examiner_name_first, method = "ssa")) %>% unnest(cols = c(results), keep_empty = TRUE) %>% select( examiner_name_first = name, gender,
    proportion_female
  ) %>%
  # Filter out rows where any of the specified columns are NA
  filter(!is.na(gender))

print(examiner_names_gender)
```

# A tibble: 1,822 x 3
examiner_name_first gender proportion_female ##   <chr>               <chr>             <dbl>
1 AARON               male             0.0082
2 ABDEL               male             0
3 ABDOU               male             0
4 ABDUL               male             0
5 ABDULHAKIM          male             0
6 ABDULLAH            male             0
7 ABDULLAHI           male             0
8 ABIGAIL             female           0.998
9 ABIMBOLA            female           0.944
10 ABRAHAM             male             0.0031
# i 1,812 more rows
```

Finally, let's join that table back to our original applications data and discard the temporary tables we have just created to reduce clutter in our environment.

remove extra columns from the gender table examiner_names_gender <- examiner_names_gender %>% select(examiner_name_first, gender)
```

joining gender back to the dataset applications <- applications %>% left_join(examiner_names_gender, by = "examiner_name_first")

cleaning up
rm(examiner_names)
rm(examiner_names_gender)

Guess the examiner's race

We'll now use package `wru` to estimate likely race of an examiner. Just like with gender, we'll get a list of unique names first, only now we are using surnames.

Isolate unique last names for race prediction
examiner_surnames <- applications %>% select(surname = examiner_name_last) %>% distinct()

examiner_surnames

```

# A tibble: 3,806 x 1

```

We'll follow the instructions for the package outlined here <https://github.com/kosukeimai/wru>.

Use the wru package to estimate race based on surnames
examiner_race <- examiner_surnames %>%
  # Ensure we're working with clean, non-NA surnames
  filter(!is.na(surname)) %>%
  # Apply the race prediction
  predict_race(voter.file = ., surname.only = TRUE) %>%
  as_tibble()

As you can see, we get probabilities across five broad US Census categories: white, black, Hispanic, Asian and other. (Some of you may correctly point out that Hispanic is not a race category in the US Census, but these are the limitations of this package.)

Our final step here is to pick the race category that has the highest probability for each last name and then join the table back to the main applications table. See this example for comparing values across columns: <https://www.tidyverse.org/blog/2020/04/dplyr-1-0-0-rowwise/>. And this one for case_when() function: https://dplyr.tidyverse.org/reference/case_when.html.

Determine the most likely race category for each surname
examiner_race <- examiner_race %>% mutate(max_race_p = pmax(pred.asi, pred.bla, pred.his, pred.oth, pred.whi)) %>% mutate(race = case_when( max_race_p == pred.asi ~ "Asian", max_race_p == pred.bla ~ "black",
    max_race_p == pred.his ~ "Hispanic", max_race_p == pred.oth ~ "other",
    max_race_p == pred.whi ~ "white",
    TRUE ~ NA_character_

Examiner's tenure

To figure out the timespan for which we observe each examiner in the applications data, let's find the first and the last observed date for each examiner. We'll first get examiner IDs and application dates in a separate table, for ease of manipulation. We'll keep examiner ID (the field `examiner_id`), and earliest and latest dates for each application (`filing_date` and `appl_status_date` respectively). We'll use functions in package `lubridate` to work with date and time values.

Extract relevant date information for each application
examiner_dates <- applications %>%

select(examiner_id, filing_date, appl_status_date)

examiner_dates

The dates look inconsistent in terms of formatting. Let's make them consistent. We'll create new variables `start_date` and `end_date`.

Analyzing Demographics and Tenure in Selected Workgroups

The next phase of the analysis focuses on understanding the demographics (gender and race) and tenure within specific workgroups. This involves comparing these attributes across different workgroups to uncover any patterns or disparities that might exist.

Set seed for reproducibility
set.seed(123)

Assuming 'applications' dataframe has a column 'examiner_art_unit'
Extract unique workgroups
This approach ensures a focused examination on a subset, making the analysis more manageable and targeted unique_workgroups <- unique(substring(applications$examiner_art_unit, 1, 3))

Randomly sample 2 unique workgroups
sampled_workgroups <- sample(unique_workgroups, 2)

Filter applications for only those workgroups
applications_filtered <- applications %>% mutate(workgroup = substring(examiner_art_unit, 1, 3)) %>% filter(workgroup %in% sampled_workgroups)

View the selected workgroups
print(sampled_workgroups)

[1] "247" "216"

At this point, `applications_filtered` contains data for a focused group of examiners. This subset will be used for detailed demographic analysis and tenure examination, providing insights into these specific workgroups.

Visualization of Demographics.

Generate plots to visually compare the gender and race distribution within the selected workgroups

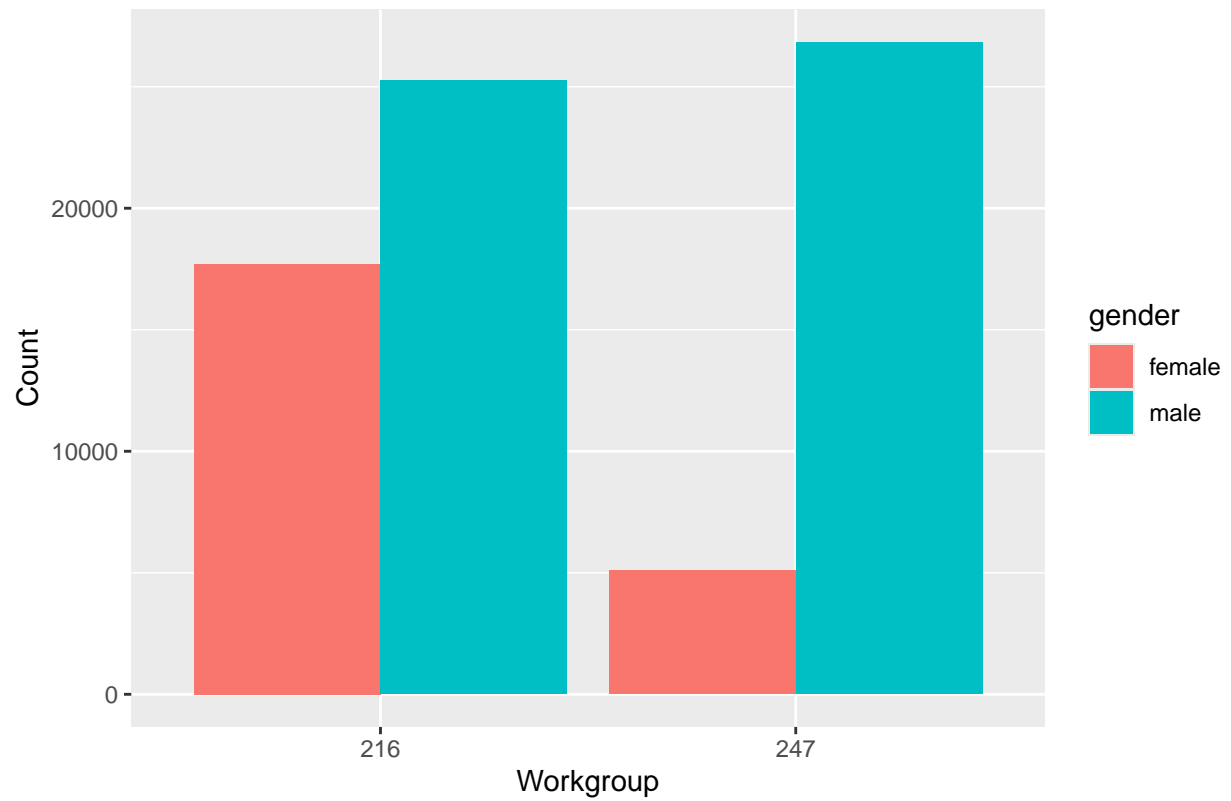

These visualizations help in quickly identifying disparities and patterns

Plots for demographics
Gender distribution
gender_dist_plot <- ggplot(selected_workgroups, aes(x = substring(examiner_art_unit, 1, 3), fill = gender)) + geom_bar(position = "dodge") + labs(title = "Gender Distribution in Selected Workgroups", x = "Workgroup", y = "Count")

Race distribution across workgroups race_dist_plot <- ggplot(selected_workgroups, aes(x = substring(examiner_art_unit, 1, 3), fill = race)) +
  geom_bar(position = "dodge") + labs(title = "Race Distribution in Selected Workgroups", x = "Workgroup", y = "Count")

print(gender_dist_plot)

Gender Distribution in Selected Workgroups

print(race_dist_plot)

Workgroup “216” appears to have a greater racial diversity compared to “247”, which is predominantly composed of one racial group (perhaps ‘white’, though the labels are not visible in the data provided). The presence of the ‘Asian’ and ‘Hispanic’ categories in noticeable but smaller proportions suggests some level of diversity within the workgroups. Understanding these distributions is crucial for the organization’s diversity and inclusion efforts and might warrant further investigation into recruitment and retention practices.

These plots provide a clear visual representation of gender and race distributions within the selected workgroups, making it easier to identify any imbalances or diversity issues that may require attention.

Create a new column 'workgroup_prefix' to store the prefix for coloring cleaned_filtered_workgroups <- selected_workgroups %>%

Now, plot the density of tenure_days colored by 'workgroup_prefix' ggplot(cleaned_filtered_workgroups, aes(x = tenure_days, fill = workgroup_prefix)) +

Density Plot of Examiner Tenure Days for Selected Workgroups

Data Source: Examiner Applications

The density plot provides a view of the distribution of tenure days:

There's a significant peak in tenure for workgroup "247" suggesting a cluster of examiners with a similar, high number of tenure days. Workgroup "216" shows a more evenly spread distribution with several smaller peaks, indicating a more varied range of tenure days. Such patterns may reflect the history and turnover rates within the workgroups and could be used to plan for future workforce needs or retirements.

Enhancing Visualization for In-depth Analysis

After preparing our data with gender, race, and tenure information, we focus on visualizing the tenure distribution within our selected workgroups. This is crucial for understanding the diversity and experience within these groups.

Violin Plot

To delve deeper into the tenure distribution by combining the density plot with a box plot for each workgroup. This hybrid visualization provides a comprehensive view of the tenure distribution, including median tenure and variability.

Violin Plot for Tenure Days by Workgroup
ggplot(applications_filtered, aes(x = workgroup, y = tenure_days, fill = workgroup)) + geom_violin(trim = FALSE) +
  geom_boxplot(width = 0.1, fill = "white") + scale_fill_manual(values = c("#66C2A5", "#FC8D62"), name = "Workgroup") + labs(title = "Violin Plot of Examiner Tenure Days by Workgroup",

x = "Workgroup",
y = "Tenure Days", caption = "Data Source: Examiner Applications") + theme_light(base_size = 14) + theme(plot.title = element_text(face = "bold", size = 16), axis.title = element_text(face = "bold"), legend.position = "none")

The violin plot offers a visual summary of tenure distribution:

Both workgroups have a wide range of tenure days, but “247” shows a more pronounced concentration at the higher end of tenure. The width of the violins at different tenure day levels indicates the density of examiners at that experience level. Insights from this plot can inform decisions about potential skill gaps, mentorship opportunities, and the allocation of new or complex cases based on examiner experience.

Scatter plot

To evaluate the potential correlation between examiners' tenure and their productivity across two specific workgroups, "247" and "216". This visualization aims to discern patterns that could indicate whether more experienced examiners have higher or lower workloads, and to what extent tenure influences application handling capacity.

Density Ridge Plot: Distribution of Tenure Days by Workgroup

The aim is to visualize and compare the distribution of tenure across examiners in the selected workgroups, "247" and "216". The density ridge plot seeks to highlight the commonality of tenure lengths and the spread of experience within these groups.

library(ggplot2)

applications_filtered %>% filter(workgroup %in% c("247", "216")) %>% group_by(workgroup, examiner_id) %>% summarise(tenure_days = mean(tenure_days, na.rm = TRUE), app_count = n(), .groups = 'drop') %>% ggplot(aes(x = tenure_days, y = app_count, color = workgroup)) + geom_point(alpha = 0.6) +

       x = "Average Tenure Days",
       y = "Number of Applications Handled") +

Relationship between Tenure Days and Application Count by Workgroup

The scatter plot relating tenure days to application count yields several insights:

There doesn't appear to be a clear, linear relationship between tenure days and the number of applications handled within each workgroup. Some individuals with a high number of tenure days handle a large number of applications, which might indicate a correlation between experience and productivity. Notably, there are examiners with fewer tenure days handling a high volume of applications. This could point to efficient training programs or possibly to overburdening of less experienced staff.

Finally, the distribution chart showcases the tenure days for the two workgroups:

Workgroup "247" shows a substantial peak around 6000 tenure days, which might indicate the presence of a cohort hired around the same time or a retention pattern. Workgroup "216" has a more uniform distribution but with fewer individuals reaching the highest tenure days seen in "247". This chart can highlight tenure-related dynamics, such as the potential for knowledge loss if a retiring cohort leaves simultaneously or the readiness for leadership roles within the groups.

Examining Advice Networks and Centrality:

To understand the social and advisory structures within the organization by mapping how examiners interact within selected workgroups.

Step 3: Create Advice Networks and Calculate Centrality Scores

Convert examiner_id in edges to character to match types

edges <- edges %>% mutate(ego_examiner_id = as.character(ego_examiner_id), alter_examiner_id = as.character(alter_examiner_id))

Convert examiner_id in selected_workgroups to character to match the types in edges

selected_workgroups <- selected_workgroups %>%
  mutate(examiner_id = as.character(examiner_id))

Now perform the join with matching types

selected_edges <- edges %>% inner_join(selected_workgroups %>% select(examiner_id), by = c("ego_examiner_id" = "examiner_id")) %>% select(ego_examiner_id, alter_examiner_id)
```

```

Filter edges for selected workgroups by joining with the selected workgroups
Assuming that examiner_id is already a character in selected_workgroups

Create advice networks

Make sure examiner_id is a character in both data frames before joining
selected_workgroups <- selected_workgroups %>%
  mutate(examiner_id = as.character(examiner_id))

centrality_scores <- centrality_scores %>%

Network Visualization:

To visually represent the advice networks, highlighting key individuals based on their centrality measures.

Join centrality scores with the selected workgroups data
workgroups_with_centrality <- left_join(selected_workgroups, centrality_scores, by = "examiner_id")

To visually represent the advice networks, highlighting key individuals based on their centrality measures. (Was taking a lot of time, so commented it out)

The visualization makes it easier to identify the structure of the network and the positions of key examiners. It allows us to see how well-connected the network is, the existence of clusters or communities within the workgroup, and whether certain individuals act as bridges or hubs.

Associate centrality scores with the nodes in the graph
V(g)$degree <- centrality_scores$degree
V(g)$betweenness <- centrality_scores$betweenness

Plotting the network with ggraph
gggraph(g, layout = "fr") +
  #geom_edge_link(color = "gray", alpha = 0.5) + # Draw edges

Conclusion

Given the correlation results between tenure days and the degree centrality measure (correlation coefficient = 0.137, highly significant with p-value < 2.2e-16), here's an analytical discussion on the choice of centrality measures and their relationship with examiner characteristics: Choice of Centrality Measure

1. Degree Centrality: Justified by the correlation results, degree centrality (which measures the number of direct connections an examiner has) is a good starting point because it gives a straightforward indication of how active an examiner is in the advice network. An examiner with high degree centrality is likely someone who either seeks a lot of advice or is sought after for advice by many colleagues.

Pros: Simple to calculate and interpret; immediately indicates active network participants. Cons: Does not account for the indirect influence or the hierarchical structure of the network.

2. Betweenness Centrality: This would be another excellent measure to consider. It captures an individual's role as an intermediary in the communication flow within the network. An examiner with high betweenness centrality would be someone who connects different clusters within the network, potentially serving as a gatekeeper or bridge of information.

Pros: Highlights individuals who control information flow and connect disparate groups. Cons: More computationally intensive and can be less intuitive to interpret.

Relationship Between Centrality and Examiners' Characteristics

The analysis of the correlation between tenure days and degree centrality suggests a positive relationship, although it is relatively weak (correlation coefficient around 0.137). Here's what this relationship might indicate:

Mild Positive Relationship: Examiners with longer tenure may have slightly more connections within the network, possibly due to having had more time to establish relationships. However, the relationship is not strong, which suggests that factors other than tenure also play a significant role in an examiner's network centrality. Centrality as a Function of Multiple Factors: Other characteristics, such as job performance, communication skills, and position within the organization, may also significantly influence centrality. An examiner's expertise, area of specialty, and willingness to share knowledge could contribute to their central role in the advice network. Centrality and Influence: Examiners with higher centrality, particularly those with high betweenness centrality, may have considerable influence over the spread of information and decision-making processes within the organization.
